

Supplemental Security Income (SSI) FAQs

What is SSI?

SSI is a safety net program administered by the Social Security Administration (SSA) that provides a very basic income to older adults and people with disabilities with no or only limited other income and resources.

How much is the benefit?

The maximum possible federal monthly benefit for an individual is currently $750. Married couples who are both on SSI receive $1,125. Some states kick in a small monthly supplement, but in most of the country, the monthly benefit amount for a single individual requires recipients to live below the federal poverty line.

Who receives SSI?

Approximately 8.2 million Americans rely on a monthly Supplemental Security Income (SSI) benefit to pay for their basic needs including rent, food, transportation, utilities, and healthcare co-pays.

More than two-thirds of older adults receiving SSI payments are women.

One out of three older adults applying for SSI has a primary language other than English.

How is SSI Different from Social Security?

Social Security (OASDI) is financed by the FICA tax on employment income, and eligibility and benefit amounts are based on work history. Unlike Social Security, SSI is needs based and is not tied to employment history. SSI recipients include people (mostly women) who did not work outside the home and people who worked in fields where they were paid off the books, such as farmworkers, some service industry workers and domestic workers.

Why does SSI need an update?

SSI was signed into law in 1972. Since then, the income and eligibility rules have changed little and the program is no longer fulfilling its promise of keeping seniors and people with disabilities from living in poverty. Today's SSI recipients cannot make ends meet and increasing numbers of older Americans and people with disabilities face severe deprivation and often are hungry and sometimes become homeless.

What updates to SSI would the Supplemental Security Income Restoration Act of 2017 make?

- Increase the amount of money an SSI recipient can receive from other non-employment sources (such as Social Security or a pension) without suffering a dollar for dollar reduction in the SSI benefit from $20 a month to $114 to reflect the increase in the cost of living. This is called the general income disregard and needs updating because today's $20 is equivalent to $3 in 1972.
- Increase the amount of money a recipient can earn from work, without suffering a reduction in benefits, from $65 a month to $377. This is called the earned income disregard. Today's $65 is worth less than $11 in 1972 money.
- Increase the amount of money recipients can save for emergencies such as home or car repairs from $2,000 for an individual and $3,000 for a couple to $10,000 and $20,000 respectively. This is called the resource limit and it's only increased by one-third since 1972 even though the cost of living today is more than 5 and a half times what it was then.
- Repeal a provision that results in drastically reduced benefits when a recipient receives help with food or shelter (even from family members). This is called the In-Kind Support and Maintenance Rule.
- Repeal the transfer penalty which unfairly penalizes people with up to three years of ineligibility if they transfer a resource.
- Remove the marriage penalty for couples by increasing the SSI couples rate to equal two times the individual rate.
- Conform treatment of state and local government earned income tax credit and child tax credits by excluding them from consideration in the same manner as federal tax payments.
